

leserbriefe@oya-online.de

The Unanswered Question 31

Can a complex society be uncomplicated?

With so many flourishing alternative-culture projects it should be obvious that uncomplicated complex society is possible. The design is straightforward: local-authority, self-reliant, communities-of-practice exchanging true-value with other experimental-centers in a global mutual-benefit network. The true-value exchanged includes how to navigate new meeting formats (toroidal, galactical, organic, etc.), healing and transformational process-facilitation-skills, cultural-context-clarification distinctions, permaculture insights, etc. Exchanging true-value for mutual benefit generates a field of influence that enhances the emergence of next-culture initiatives. Within a couple of generations humanity could be living as a global organism of 100 million sustainable-culture nanonations, each with 7 to 700 members.

The bottleneck slowing the shift to a simple and diverse human presence on Earth is individuals taking their authority back, abandoning the patriarchal empire like a child eventually abandons training wheels on their bicycle. It is true that humans are born without authority as babies and would soon perish if an authority did not take care of us daily. But the cocoon of survival-tricks we build to survive childhood is meant to be cracked open during late teenage years through formidable initiatory processes that question every assumption, belief, interpretation and conclusion we live by. As the cocoon becomes optional the Being takes more and more responsibility. Responsibility is applied consciousness. Only the uninitiated think it possible to take authority without taking responsibility.

Modern culture does not provide initiated initiators. They must emerge from beyond the belief systems of modern culture. Perhaps you were born to provide authentic initiatory processes. Perhaps you developed initiator talents over more than one lifetime. Perhaps in a previous life you were destroyed for bringing people into more awareness and responsibility, and while dying you vowed never to do it again. If it feels like this could be the case, the following realization may be helpful: "It did not work. Killing me to stop me from delivering consciousness expansion did not work... because I am back!" You can restart by making a new decision: "The grieving time is over. I am back to work!"

Clinton Callahan www.nextculture.org